Adair County's Sarah Hatton Elected to KASA Board of Directors

(Frankfort, Ky) Sarah Hatton, director of secondary education for Adair County Schools, has joined the Kentucky Association of School Administrators Board of Directors as the Role Group Director representing District Academics.

KASA's role group directors ensure that the association's statewide work is informed by administrators serving in a range of specialized leadership positions. Representing district academics, Hatton will provide a voice for the leaders responsible for curriculum, instruction, assessment and continuous academic improvement in Kentucky's school districts.

"Sarah brings the perspective of a leader who understands how district vision becomes meaningful classroom practice," said KASA Chief Executive Officer Dr. Rhonda Caldwell. "Her commitment to strong instruction, educator support and student achievement will be a tremendous asset to KASA's board and to academic leaders throughout the commonwealth."

As Adair County Schools' director of secondary education, Hatton supports teaching and learning across the district's secondary schools. Her role requires collaboration with teachers, principals and district leaders to strengthen instructional practices and expand opportunities for students.

Hatton will use her position on the board to connect KASA with district academic leaders across Kentucky, elevate their ideas and concerns and help shape professional learning and advocacy responsive to the challenges they face.

“District academic leaders have the privilege and responsibility of helping educators turn ambitious goals into stronger learning experiences for students,” Hatton said. “I am honored to represent these leaders and look forward to creating connections, sharing effective practices and helping KASA support academic excellence in every Kentucky school district.”
